DAY 2: 8 July 2010, Thursday

8:00 – 8:30	Registration	Foyer
8:30 – 10:30	Session 2: Investments for Enhancing Productivity: Innovations and Good Practices With world population projected to reach 9 billion by 2050, food production will need to increase by 70%, according to FAO estimates. Thus, enhanced productivity is important, especially in existing cultivable lands where production is small-scale and water resources are highly stressed. This session discusses some of the innovative practices that work at the ground level. These are the experiences of a private agribusiness entity adopting Good Agriculture Practices (GAP) and appropriate extension services, an international agriculture center promoting science-based research and development, and a development partner's findings on water use management. The session will also facilitate discussion on the prerequisites for up- and out-scaling these innovations. Moderator: Rosa Rolle, Senior Agro-Industry and Post-Harvest Officer, FAO-RAP Presentation 1 – The Role of Smallholder Farm Organizations in the Promotion of GAP, Agricultural Extension and Communications: A View from the Private Sector Paichayon Uathaveekul, Chairman, SWIFT Company of Thailand Presentation 2 – A Global Rice Science Partnership: The Source of Innovation to Spur Rice Productivity Growth in Asia Robert Zeigler, Director General, International Rice Research Institute (IRRI) Presentation 3 – Agricultural Water Management: Innovations and Good Practices Thierry Facon, Senior Water Management Officer, FAO-RAP Open Forum	Zone A
8:30 – 10:30	Session 3: Investing in Innovative Approaches and Good Practices in Natural Resource Management Sustainable agriculture intensification means producing more food and agriculture products from the same overall resources, while reducing the negative environmental impacts of the effort and, at the same time, increasing contributions to sustain the management of natural resources and improve the provision of environmental services. It thus implies a revolution that is "greener than the green revolution" which, as the featured cases in this session will show, is not impossible. Moderator: Simmathiri Appanah, National Forestry Programme Advisor (Asia-Pacific), FAO-RAP	Zone B

8:30 – 10:30	Session 4: Building Resilience Against Vulnerability: Technologies, Institutions, and Policies Because of climate change, Asia and the Pacific, as with the rest of the world, is expected to become warmer and weather disturbances will become more frequent and intense. Besides these emerging geophysical challenges and uncertainties, the region is also vulnerable to economic upheavals, such as the recent financial crisis. Agriculture and the food sectors will be the most vulnerable. The good news, however, is that new technologies and innovative practices that help address climate change and other geophysical and economic shocks are emerging, and will need to be promoted more widely. This session features case studies on technologies and innovative practices to cope with climate change and economic shocks, and on how these innovations can be replicated. Moderator: David Kahan, Senior Farming System Development Officer, FAO-RAP Presentation 1 – Agricultural Insurance: A Panacea?
