

Acknowledgement

The author acknowledges with thanks the stimulating contributions offered towards preparing this training course by colleagues social scientists who conceived, managed and implemented ADB's Regional Technical Assistance program on Capacity Building For Resettlement Risk Management (RETA 6091), in particular, Susanna Price, Jayantha Perera, Ruwani Jayewardene, Scott Ferguson, Marla Huddleston, Susan Tamondong, Jocelyn Munsayac, and many others who have carried out field work in the RETA countries.

Special appreciation is publicly expressed also to my old and new colleagues and friends at China's National Research Center for Resettlement (NRCR) at Hohai University, and in particular to Prof. Shi Guoqing, Prof. Chen Shaojun and Long Tongfei. This course on the Risks and Reconstruction model was tested first during its initial delivery at Hohai University/NRCR in November-December 2004. Feedback from that test, and the discussion with students and faculty, has led to significant expansion and improvements.

Last, yet very important, I extend a personal tribute to my hard working research assistant, Maya Silver. She has lent the skills of her own specialty as a student of design and art to the resettlement content of this course, processing and formatting my continuously revised power point slides in ways which I couldn't have ever done myself.

MMC

Michael M. Cernea is Research Professor of Anthropology and International Affairs at George Washington University, Washington DC, and Honorary Professor of resettlement and social studies at Hohai University, Nanjing, China. He joined the World Bank as its first sociologist in 1974, served as the World Bank's Senior Advisor for Policy and Sociology until 1997, and worked also as member in the TAC/Science Council of the CGIAR in 1998-2003. (mcernea@worldbank.org). The syllabus' structure, and the content of the modules and their supporting materials, are developed by the author, express his views, and should not necessarily be attributed to any one of the institutions with which he is associated.