Asian Development Bank Institute

The Asian Development Bank Institute (ADBI) is the think tank of the Asian Development Bank (ADB). It was established in 1997 to share knowledge and skills to reduce poverty and support long-term growth and competitiveness in developing Asia and the Pacific. Its staff comes from 14 countries. It is the top regional studies center and the second-ranked government-affiliated think tank in the world.

ADBI helps policy makers in developing Asia through research that focuses on medium- to long-term development, and through training that helps reduce poverty. ADBI has cultivated an extensive network of experts, researchers, think tanks, government agencies, and civil society and private sector organizations.

RESEARCH

www.adb.org/adbi/research

ADBI conducts high-level research on issues with strategic policy implications in Asia and the Pacific. It publishes books and working papers to identify effective development strategies, hosts presentations by distinguished experts, and organizes regional and international conferences and seminars that contribute to the development policy debate.

ADBI responds to developing member countries' demand for knowledge. The main research areas are sustainable development goals and trade; trade finance gaps; digital economy; overweight and obesity; financial inclusion, regulation, and education; and housing policy.

CAPACITY BUILDING AND TRAINING

www.adb.org/adbi/capacity-building-training

ADBI holds policy dialogues, course-based training, and e-learning for midlevel and senior officials from ADB's developing member countries. These activities tackle development issues and solutions, build consensus among policy makers and stakeholders, and provide a forum for sharing development practices and country experiences.
